To Hell with Bloodsuckers: a Willow the Vampire short story Maria Thermann

Willow Band, an eleven-year-old vampire, faces a tough choice:

should she help her former Headmaster and his small son who are being evicted by two greedy bankers and risk giving her secret away or should she let Headmaster Bakewell down and remain an anonymous vampire in the rural idyll of Stinkforth-upon-Avon?

A century old puzzle is finally unravelled, when evil bankers Ebenezer Hardcastle and George Greedy of private banking firm Avarice & Slimeball try to throw Bakewell and his son Kevin out of their home in the middle of winter. Mr Bakewell had lost his job at the local school and could not pay his bills. Now Greedy & Hardcastle see their chance to get their hands on Bakewell's ancestral home, where rumour has it, a treasure is buried, a fortune that could set up two hapless bankers for the rest of their lives and cover up their misdeeds at the same time.

Needless to say, with Willow close by those two bankers will get their come-uppance, but what will the personal cost be for Willow the Vampire?

This short story deals with loyalty through the ages and making friends in unexpected places...and that greedy bankers, young and old, big and small, wherever they are...had better watch out, because Willow's on the prowl and knows just how to deal with them.
