Excerpt: ... rapid sketch or record of the impression received, necessarily broad and simple; secondly, the highly-polished work in which all the details have been long and elaborately studied. The first is the style in which I have endeavoured to reproduce my impressions of the Holy Land and Syria, and I offer in this little work my own observations only, "made on the spot." JERUSALEM BY MOONLIGHT FROM THE MOUNT OF OLIVES The full moon rose o'er Anathoth, And gleamed upon the lone Dead Sea, Threw silver spears o'er Olivet, And touched each hoary rock and tree. In solemn darkness Kedron lay; But all the wealth of light was poured Fondly upon Jerusalem, The ancient city of the Lord. As ivory her houses gleamed Against the blue of hill and sky, And all her slender towers arose Like shafts of silver thrown on high. The sun-bright stars drew back absorbed In radiance, as morning dreams Melt in the truthful light of day--Merged that which is in that which seems. No sound profaned the holy scene Save the sad jackal's plaintive wail; No light of lamp, no ray of star, Disturbed the shadows blue and pale. And just so looked Jerusalem To Him who, on the self-same spot, Would long ago have sheltered her Beneath His wing, but she would not. So she remains unchanged and lone, Till He shall come again and fold In the vast pity of His love Creeds, nations, empires, worlds untold. MARGARET THOMAS. INDEX Abbx, or cloak, 48, 289.
