In summary, the BERLINER TYPE was characterized by its remarkably high standard, a veritable role model for “design work and its application in print”. Prizes were also awarded for all the disciplines involved in the process, from planning and conception, graphics and design, illustration, photography, printing, and reproduction through to processing. And there were prizes for annual reports, magazines, catalogs, books, calendars, elaborate agency portraits, bound, stapled, glued, in hard and soft covers with beautiful spines or, somewhat rustic, simply as a glued stitched binding.
